Logan Hill was accused of shooting Mollie Austin on March 8, 1920. Mollie Austin had been separated from her husband and had allegedly been having an affair with the defendant. On the day of the crime, Hill claims to have gotten back from work at 7 AM, gone into a saloon and gotten so drunk that he doesn't remember anything. As evidence against him, he had tried to commit suicide that day by slitting his throat. The jury found him guilty of 2nd degree murder.

William and Ruth Feig had been separated for about 6 weeks prior to the shooting. They had not been getting along well, and there ~~was~~ were many disagreements between them. It is unclear what happened on May 3, the day of her ~~murder~~ murder, but apparently William either chased or dragged his wife through the yard of her house, she tried to shoot him, he chased her into a bake shop and shot her three times in the head and once in the belly. The evidence in this case is very confused, but what apparently happened is that there was a strike in progress at the docks. The Longshoremen's union, a local union of the IWW, was on strike, but there were still many blacks who were working, "scabs." These black workers were being harassed by the longshoremen, who were mostly Polish and lived in that neighborhood. Some of the blacks had pistols and they say they were being chased by the Polish strikers. The Polish witnesses claim that there ~~was~~ was no crowd ~~chasing~~ chasing them, but only people hanging around their stoops. The witnesses say that 3 black men ran down the street shooting, and that is how Stanley Parylak was killed. The jury apparently believed

Remarks:

William ~~Feldkeller~~ and Jennie Feldkeller had been married for about 12 yrs. Jennie had got sick of staying at home with their three children and got a part-time job at a restaurant. Her husband found out that she was using this job to meet men and ~~when~~ sometimes when she claimed to be working she was going out. They had words and Jennie threatened William and told him that ~~he~~ she was leaving him and her boyfriend was going to beat him up. William bought a gun for protection. That night they had more words and in a fit of anger William shot her. The jury found him guilty of 2nd deg. murder.
